

Workshop 1 Answers:

1. Not to seek an individualized, deserved outcome for one person's crime/choice, but to deter the greater public and instill terror.
2. How hard that particular crime would be to deter. Lack of policing didn't help, need for the crime to be prevented, and how hard that crime would be to deter. T
3. Because the system wasn't based on seeking justice and punishing the severity of crime with equal severity. Given the system isn't based on justice, it may reinforce predisposed hierarchies and injustices. This may be particularly apparent when someone is treated unjustly but does not have a crime committed against them.
4. Makes everyone fearful and does create a strong sense of terror. Not many value the reward of crime higher than the risk.

Existing systems of incarceration cost heavily on the government/tax payers. Given this system already doesn't place an importance on the individual but rather on a utilitarian, 'greater-good- for everyone, execution does serve their purpose.

**PLEASE NOTE, we did not realise this had to be submitted on LMS, so we produced a fairly informal copy. Will be more prepared next week.**
